

Tar Heel History

Since 1928, University of North Carolina golf has become synonymous with great players, coaches and unquestioned success...

The tradition known as Carolina golf has produced not only great players and teams, but many exciting memories since the Tar Heels first played in 1928. That team won the state intercollegiate title and finished with a 3-3-1 record.

Despite that inauspicious debut, Carolina golf has been filled with success.

Over the years, Carolina has posted a 308-98-20 record in dual-match play for a winning percentage of nearly 75 percent. In addition, the Tar Heels posted a 71-33-6 record in dual-match play in the Atlantic Coast Conference, a winning percentage of over 67 percent. Although match play has drifted from collegiate golf circles during the past two decades, and replaced by tournament play, Carolina has still managed a mark of success.

The Tar Heels have won 81 collegiate tournaments, including 10 ACC crowns. Carolina golfers have won individual championships on 893 occasions, including a pair of national champions - Harvie Ward in 1949 and John Inman in 1984.

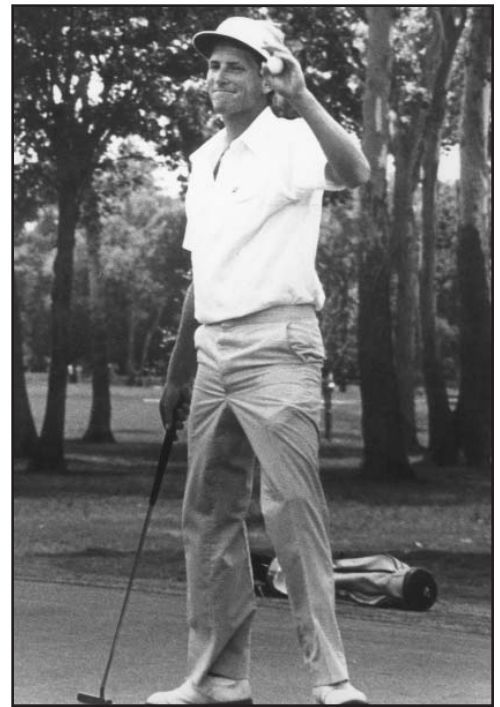

Throughout its storied golf history, Carolina has also had 28 All-Americas, spanning over five decades. Harvie Ward was Carolina's first All-America in 1949 when he captured the NCAA individual golf crown. In 1953, the Tar Heel squad finished second nationally and Bill Williamson became the school's second All-America. After Bill Thornton won All-America honors in 1958, Pete Green garnered consecutive All-America honors in 1961 and 1962, becoming the first Tar Heel golfer to do so. The next Tar Heel golfer to gain All-America status was Steve Robbins. He received the honor three consecutive times in 1965, 1966 and 1967. Marty West and John McGough were the next two Tar Heel golfers to gain All-America kudos twice. West garnered the individual honor in 1970 and 1971, and McGough won the honor in 1978, when he finished fourth in the NAAs, and in 1979. Frank Fuhrer was also named All-America in 1979. Fuhrer won the honor the following two years in 1980 and 1981, becoming only the second three-time All-America in Tar Heel golf history. After John Spelman became the ninth Tar Heel All-America in 1981, John Inman garnered the honor three times from 1982 to 1984. In 1984, Inman also won the NCAA individual championship. The next Tar Heel golf great was Davis Love III, who, like Inman, gained All-America status three times from 1983 to 1985. Another two-time Tar Heel All-America was Greg Parker in 1985 and 1987, when he placed sixth in the NAAs. The next two Carolina All-Americas were John Hughes and Bryan Sullivan, both garnering kudos in 1986. Hughes repeated as All-America in 1987 and Neal Sullivan was honorable mention All-America in 1989 and 1990. Tee Burton joined Sullivan as an honorable mention All-America in 1990. In 1991, Pat Moore was selected as an All-America after leading the Tar Heels to a second-place NCAA finish. John Aber and Tee Burton joined Moore as honorable mention selections. Rob Bradley was selected an honorable mention All-America twice, in 1993 and 1996. Mark Wilson joined Bradley as an honorable mention selection in 1996 and again in 1997. Ross Bain joined Wilson as an honorable mention selection in 1997. Max Harris was a three-time All-America after being named to the squad in 1998, 1999 and 2000. Don Hill was a two-time honorable mention All-America, in 1998 and 1999 while Brad Hyler was an honorable mention selection in 2000. Dustin Bray was selected to the 2002 and 2003 All-America squads. Ramon Bescansa joined Bray on the 2002 team as an honorable mention selection while Richard Treis was an honorable mention selection on the 2003 team.

Carolina has been represented internationally by two Walker Cup team members. Frank Fuhrer was selected to the 1981 Walker Cup squad while Tom Scherrer was a member of the 1991 team. John Inman was chosen to the 1984 World Amateur Team after winning the 1984 Fred Haskins Award as the National Player-of-the-Year. In 1996, Mark Wilson was the recipient of the Ben Hogan Award as the top scholar-athlete in collegiate golf based upon his academic accomplishment and athletic performance. Max Harris represented England/Ireland on the 1998, 1999 and 2000 Palmer Cup teams. In the summer of 2002, Dustin Bray represented the United States in the U.S./Japan Matches while in the summer of 2003 he was on the Palmer Cup squad.

Although he played here over 30 years ago, Ward is still one of Carolina's most famous golfers. A native of Tarboro, N.C., Ward first gained national prominence in 1947 when he reached the quarterfinals of the U.S. Amateur at Pebble Beach. A year later, he won the North and South Amateur at Pinehurst with wins over former U.S. Amateur champ Dick Chapman and international star Frank Stranahan.

Stranahan avenged that loss in the North and South Amateur finals a year later, but by that time, Ward was a household name following his victory in the 1949 NCAA Tournament. On his way to the title, Ward defeated Oklahoma's Bo Winninger, LSU's Gardner Dickinson and Notre Dame's Tommy Veech before dispatching Texas' Morris Williams, Jr. in the 36-hole final, five and four. After winning the Southern Conference championship as a senior, Ward went on to post victories in the 1952 British Amateur, 1954 Canadian Amateur and 1955 and 1956 U.S. Amateurs following his graduation.

Carolina's golfing tradition does not stop there. Current players on the PGA tour include the aforementioned Davis Love III, Pat Moore, Tom Scherrer and Mark Wilson. Jim Ferree, who won the 1953 Southern Conference title while playing for the Tar Heels, is a fixture on the Senior Tour. In addition, Max Harris, Rob Bradley and Greg Parker will be playing on various professional tours worldwide this year. Other great players have included Erwin Laxton who won three consecutive Southern Conference championships in the early 1930's, Joe Correll who reached the NCAA quarterfinals in 1954, and Charlotte native Gene Lookabill who accomplished that same feat two years later.

Carolina has had its share of great coaches as well.

After the team participated coach-less in 1928, John Kenfield took over the duties in 1929 for a six-year run. Kenfield, better known as UNC's tennis mentor for 30-plus years, gave up his dual duties in 1935 and Chuck Erickson arrived on the scene. Later to become UNC's Athletic Director, Erickson built Carolina into a national golf power. In his 23 seasons, Erickson's teams posted a 182-45-9 dual-match record, won five conference championships, and placed second and fourth in the 1953 and 1960 NCAA's. Erickson's tenure was interrupted for three years during World War II when the school fielded no team, but the post-war era produced Ward and the new Finley Golf Course in Chapel Hill in 1949. Previous to that, UNC played its home matches at Durham's Hope Valley Country Club.

Erickson, a long time member of the NCAA Golf Committee, was succeeded by Ed Kenney in 1961, whose teams won over 71 percent of their matches during his 12 years as head coach. Clyde Walker served as coach for one year in 1973, and Mike McLeod for four years beginning in 1974.

McLeod was succeeded in 1978 by Devon Brouse, who had an immediate impact on the Carolina golf program as he guided the Tar Heels to a fifth place NCAA Tournament finish in his first season. However, Brouse's greatest accomplishment in his 21-year stint in Chapel Hill was leading the Tar Heels to a fourth-place finish in the 1984 NCAA Tournament while coaching NCAA individual champion John Inman. In 1991 he led the Heels to a second-place NCAA finish, tying the highest NCAA showing in school history and in 1993 the Tar Heels finished in third place, just two strokes behind team champion Florida.

Brouse's teams also won six ACC titles and experienced success in the NCAA Tournament, carding 17 top-20 finishes and 10 top-10 finishes. His teams won 55 tournament titles and he coached 54 individual champions, including six ACC individual champions and one NCAA individual champion.

Brouse's team became the ACC team to beat in the early '80s when he was selected the 1981 ACC Coach of the Year. He was awarded that honor again in 1991 and 1995.

Former Carolina player John Inman, who was the 1984 NCAA Individual Champion, became the Tar Heel head coach in 1998-99 and has already experienced success in his first four years at the helm.

The Tar Heels won three tournaments his first year and posted 10th-place finishes at the NCAA Championships in 1999 and 2000. In 2001, Carolina made its 31st NCAA appearance, barely missing the cut to the NCAA Championships. The Tar Heels returned to the top 20 in 2002, finishing in 17th place and recorded another top-10 finish in 2003, tying for ninth place. In five years at the helm Inman's teams have won eight tournament titles and he has coached 11 individual champions, including two ACC champions.

The names and faces have changed throughout the years, but the commitment to success remains the same for the Carolina golf program.

ACC Composite Standings

The 2004 Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament will mark the 51st time the conference teams have met to determine a champion.

This year's tournament will be played at the Old North State Club in New London, N.C., marking the eighth time the tournament has been played at Old North State.

Current members of the ACC include Clemson, Duke, Florida State, Georgia Tech, Maryland, North Carolina, North Carolina State, Virginia and Wake Forest.

Here's a composite look at the tournament since the first one in 1954.

Prominent Amateur Winners

The University of North Carolina's outstanding golfing tradition extends beyond its many fall and spring season accomplishments. Tar Heel linksters consistently fare well each summer in top amateur tournaments, including the North and South Amateur and the Western Amateur, two of the nation's most prestigious events.
